

Any public or (especially) private subscription radio should be able to broadcast any content that its listeners or (especially) subscribers might elect to hear or benefit from, with the exception of explicitly or offensive content on the public stations. U.S. Constitution First ammendment rights should be especially protected on subscription (private) forms of communication. Reports of local or regional Weather and Traffic information previously were the domain of local or regional public forms of communication. It is the right and priveledge of subscription radio to report this and other forms of information to its subscribers. There is NO legitimate basis for the denial of these rights to this form of communication.
